"Going Green"

THINK
GLOBALLY,
ACT
LOCALLY

'Going green' is a phrase that we hear a lot of these days. Buy this laundry detergent; it is green. Buy this toothpaste; it is green. This is all very nice and the hope is that we all stay green. In the long run it will definitely benefit the planet. However, being completely green involves more than just buying the right kind of biodegradable toothpaste.

At its core the Boone County Conservation District (BCCD) is a green organization. We do a lot to promote 'going green'. For instance, our education department spends time with the public (especially our youth) teaching them how our planet functions, how we can take care of it, and most important, informing them about the natural areas and processes in Boone County. Second, we maintain our conservation areas in a way that people can relax and be involved in passive activities such as fishing, canoeing, hiking, wildlife watching, botany, and skiing. Third we purchase land that helps protect water quality, humans need for open space, and threatened/endangered species (plants and animals).

The BCCD has made a commitment to managing district properties in a way that promotes the re-establishment and management of native habitat. These habitats include; prairie, wetland, oak savanna, and woodland. By returning the biodiversity it makes for a healthier conservation area. The work that needs to be done to bring back biodiversity is technical, labor intensive, and frustrating. However, seeing a landscape come to life as a result of one's work is very exciting.

Enhancing, restoring, and managing a wide range of habitats is a growing focus of the district. Of particular interest are the few remaining patches of native remnants. A remnant is a niche habitat that has not been completely altered by humans. Generally, remnants are untouched enough so as to resemble presettlement character. If you have never seen a remnant, find one and visit or ask one of our staff to take you to one. It might be life changing.

It takes a lot of energy for the BCCD to establish and maintain all of these sites. More than the district can provide. With that being said, this is a call for volunteers to learn what habitat restoration is all about and to help manage our conservation areas with our natural resources staff. This can be done all year round after work, after school, or on weekends. If you have never done work like this and feel intimidated by it don't be. We are more than happy to teach and we always remember there was a point when we didn't know a whole lot about the subject either.

Our goal in the years ahead is to set up a stewardship network and have a small army of habitat restoration volunteers helping with numerous natural resources related tasks. Some jobs that volunteers can become involved with include: weed management, seed collecting, seed cleaning, broadcasting seed, planting, and biological inventory. Volunteers who show commitment and great interest will with anticipation one day manage an entire unit ranging from 1-40 acres in size.
